

To summarize this analysis we can see that there are direct correlations to the types of schools and the performance of their students in reading and math.

In this analysis it is apparent that the schools that perform better in many of the aspects are charter schools; they perform better overall in reading and math by more than twenty percent compared to the district schools. It is also seen that schools that spend more money on students don't necessarily perform better than the schools that spend less on students.